

SOCIAL LIFE IN AND ABOUT PHILADELPHIA

MISS IZORA VENETTA HUNTER

Miss Hunter's marriage to Dr. J. Leslie Davis will take place tomorrow at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas P. Hunter, Cookkenny, Haverford.

MISS MARGOT SCULL, of this city, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Ellis Scull, was guest of honor yesterday at a luncheon given in Hot Springs, Va., by Miss Iona Bloodgood, of New York. The other guests were Miss Cordelia Biddle, Miss Helen G. Alexander, of Tusco, N. Y.; W. J. Sturgis, Augie B. Duke and Brinton Buckwalter, of New York. Mrs. G. H. Whigham chaperoned the affair.

Mrs. William Dison entertained at a box party last night in honor of her daughter, Miss Pauline Dison. There were eight guests. Miss Dison wore a dainty gown of white satin, veiled in tulle. The long haunched bodice was formed of layers of satin folds, and was finished with a narrow girdle of sea-blue satin, which was finished with short ends. Two narrow straps formed the shoulders, and the sleeves were entirely of white tulle and very short. The skirt of the gown was made with a very full overskirt of tulle. Miss Dison wore an exquisite gown of midnight-blue velvet and tulle.

Mrs. Alexander MacColl and Miss Aileen MacColl are at present in Atlantic City spending several weeks. The MacColls were in Germantown two weeks before war was declared, and had difficulty in reaching home. Mrs. MacColl's health has been considerably undermined, and her family are hoping that a few weeks' stay at the shore will be of great benefit.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis S. Fiske, who are motoring home from New England, left Lenox yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Childs Drexel have issued invitations for a dinner dance to be given in honor of Miss Cordelia Biddle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel Biddle, the night of October 26, at Woodton, their large country seat in Bryn Mawr. Miss Biddle will probably be one of the most popular of this season's debutantes. A great many entertainments have been planned in her honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury will give a dance for her December 22, and her parents will give a large ball in the rose gardens of the Bellevue-Stratford the night of January 7.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Middleton Fisher, of 1029 Clinton street, have issued invitations for a tea to be given at Alverthorpe, their country place in Jenkintown, the afternoon of October 23.

Miss Margaret Moore Riker, of New York, and Henry Pratt McKeen will be guests of honor at a dinner which will be given tonight by Dr. and Mrs. Norton Downes at their home, Fordhook, Three Tuns.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucian Keith, who have been spending the autumn at their farm in Westwood, Chester County, will not return to their home in Warren, Va., until early November.

DEBUTANTE AFFAIRS

Miss Tenney To Be Presented at a Tea This Afternoon—Mrs. Taylor Gives a Luncheon. Miss Katherine Tenney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Tenney, will be introduced this afternoon by her parents at a large tea, which they will give at their country place, Maywood, in Haverford. The house is a veritable bower of bloom, so many beautiful baskets and bouquets have been received by the debutante. One exquisite bit is a small dull gold basket with a long slender handle, filled with the loveliest of tiny sweetheart rosebuds, which peep up from the soft turf through feathery sprays of maidenhair. The handle is tied with a bow of sea-blue satin ribbon. The basket is indeed one of the daintiest debutante offerings of the season.

Miss Tenney is wearing a dainty gown of soft white, which is particularly girlish and effective. Receiving with her are Miss Jean Morris Lillie, Miss Hansell French Earle, Miss Katharine Z. Ogden, Miss Ellnor J. Bean, Miss Edith H. Bally, Miss Eleanor Dougherty, Miss Anna Mary Walthour, Miss Mary Arreen Miller, Miss Margaret Hurton, Miss Lucia Ward, Miss Eleanor Bispham, Miss Elizabeth Bailey, of Harrisburg; Miss Martha Bent, of New York, and Miss Ruth Sberburne and Miss Betty Sberburne, of Boston. Mrs. Tenney has asked several of her friends to preside at the tea table during the afternoon. They are Mrs. Edgar C. Selton, Mrs. Lewis Lillie, Mrs. Winthrop Sargent and Mrs. Henry Tatnall.

A second debutante affair today was the luncheon which was given by Mrs. A. Merritt Taylor, of Brookwood, Wayne, in honor of Miss Joan Newbold Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Thompson. The table was beautifully ornamented with ferns and rosebuds. Among the guests were Miss Frances Tyson, Miss Elsa Reath, Miss Virginia Roberts, Miss Katharine Z. Ogden, Miss Edith R. Ellison, Miss Dorothea Oberbeuffer, Miss Hansell French Earle, Miss Mary E. Clayton and Miss Jean Morris Lillie.

CAMDEN AND VICINITY

Miss Marguerite Edgar has returned to her winter home at 7th and Cooper street, after spending several months in Michigan. The younger members of the Haddon County Club at Haddon Field, will give a Halloween party at the club.

HURRAH! HURRAH!

"Teddy" Explains "His Policies" Via Lew Dockstader at Keith's.

The ubiquitous "Teddy," the loquacious "Teddy," the "Teddy" Don Quixote charging the windmills of predatory wealth, the famous founder of the "Annals club" and the wielder of the "big club," appeared yesterday at Keith's Chestnut Street Theatre vicariously in the person of Lew Dockstader, that joyous minstrel comedian.

Clothed in khaki uniform, wearing the familiar spectacles and the grinning teeth, the celebrated black-faced Lew gave a burlesque of a certain "third-term candidate" which is one of the most uproariously side-splitting funny acts that has appeared in vaudeville. Charging back and forth, imitating the famous hissing voice to perfection, Dockstader proceeded to explain the famous "policies."

"The Constitution of the United States gives me the privilege of thinking for myself," declared he, with a sweep of the arm. "But if any man disagrees with me he disabuses that privilege."

"It is true, as many people say, that I resemble George Washington in many ways. George Washington served his country—so did I. George Washington led the battles of his country—so did I. George Washington never told a lie—ah, there's where I got it on George."

"During my absence in South America many things happened. During my absence in South America the birth rate decreased below the birth rate of any country on the globe. Now, I don't mean to say I blame the Democrats. But the people should have been more 'progressive.'"

"When I got back after my eight months' absence what did I find that Wilson and Bryan had done to MY country? When I left MY country MY people were happy. When I came back MY people were unhappy."

"When I was in South America the doctor gave me a hypodermic injection, and I began to discover things. I discovered a river—a river 100 miles long. I'd discovered more, only the doctor lost his hypo. Among other things I discovered new and strange birds. I discovered what I called the prohibition bird. The prohibition bird is a busybody, with a large mouth. At night it seeks the wet places. "Now I don't have anything against Bryan. Bryan is called Colonel, and so am I. But when people salute me they salute an officer of the army. Bryan never saw a battle. When people salute Bryan as Colonel they mean the interior of a nut."

Of the nine acts on the Keith bill this week not one can be adversely criticized as lacking in genuine amusing qualities and high order of presentation—the bill is of superlative excellence and a top-notch combination in vaudeville where, too often, the said is spoiled by bugs in the leaves.

Irvn Cobb's appealing story, "Sergeant Bagby," has been made into an act of delicious, romantic humor. It is reunion day in the South. The Southern soldier and the Yankee meet and are about to fight, but, under the influence of the genial, beloved Bagby, shake hands for a reunited country. There is an elopement, a marriage under unique circumstances and Bagby telling the story of the impending battle, when the General asks: "Where is Sergeant Bagby?" "Here, your honor," replies Bagby, bowing. "Then," says the General, "let the battle proceed."

Ma-Belle—airy, fairy—with a ballet of equally airy, fairy girls, floats, soars and glides through a series of captivating dances. Ma-Belle lifts you into the air, takes you with her into the magical mazes of the dance coquette and solo classique. Ma-Belle and her dances are altogether lovely.

In contrast to the rest of the bill, Chris Richards, an English comedian, performs grotesque antics different from but as funny as the act of Dockstader, and Lambert, in quick changes, gives marvelous impersonations of Lieut. Hollman, Johann Strauss, Paderewski and Gounod. In "The Rubs," presented by Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Barry, Barry appears as Zeke Wilkins, from Henstoft Corners, in New York selling eggs. In the role of a "Johnny" courting Dazle Dazleman, the actress, he effects bucolic facial expressions provocative of such high humor that one might with justification call him "The Mark Twain of vaudeville."

Winthrop Ames has engaged Herbert Kealey and Edith Shannon to act the principal roles in "The Children of Earth," the prize play by Alice Brown, which he is to produce next month.

Meanwhile, at the Little Theatre, in New York, October 29, Mr. Ames will present "A Pair of Silk Stockings," a comedy by Cyril Harcourt, which was one of London's last season's successes.

THE DRAMA

JULIETTE DAY In "Chin-Chin" at the Forrest.

A LADY IN DEBT, A MARRIAGE IN JAIL

Mrs. Fiske in a Deliciously Amusing Comedy, "Lady Betty Martingale," An Orchid Among Plays.

A gay and dashing lady, a dare-devilish, gambling, swearing lady, a lady of wit, engagingly unscrupulous, borrowing money right and left, and running up exorbitant bills at the dressmakers, jewelers and perfumers. Such is Lady Betty, the heroine of the new comedy by John Luther Long, the celebrated author of "Madam Butterfly," and Frank Statton, an Englishman, which opened last night at the Broad Street Theatre. By the incomparable art of Mrs. Fiske, Lady Betty vivaciously and volubly stepped into life from the time of George II, and for nine hours delightfully held a curious, surprised and questioning audience by her whimsical escapades.

In a day of plays dealing with politicians, criminals, lady smugglers, millionaires with pasts, delirious husbands and musical comedies of surface humor, Lady Betty Martingale appears as an orchid in the theatrical conservatory of ferns and geraniums. Quaint in its hoop-skirt charm, bizarre in its reminiscence of Sheridan and the atmosphere of 1750, the popularity of the play at this time is still dubious. For while the play must have an irresistible appeal to those who enjoy the unusual, the subtle, the exotic, it will be interesting to observe what wider appeal it may have for those who throng houses featuring gorgeous girls in glittering gowns or abbreviated apparel.

Lady Betty, summoned by her father, Canon Slowpoke, who has expended 20,000 pounds of money borrowed from Sir Richeot Raneble, Lord High Chancellor of England, on the writing of a dictionary, is confronted in the first act by the aforesaid Sir Richeot, who sinks upon his knees and begs her to marry him. The corpulent Sir Richeot, as Lady Betty says, has truly a "strawberry nose." Arthur Elliot, as the bustling, hollering High Chancellor, is roaringly funny—only he roars too loudly at first and thus destroys the effect of his rage after Lady Betty—swearing—rushes away, screaming "The jail! The jail!" Preferring jail to marriage, Balliffs are waiting without to arrest Lady Betty for her debts and take her to the fleet.

Lady Fawcett—Marie Chambers—arrives after the outraged Richeot has departed in high dudgeon. Her most intimate friend, Lady Fawcett advises Lady Betty how to escape the bailiff and jail. She tells of a certain noble lady who put a wreath of purple flowers in her hair and by means of a jeweled dagger led to death. "But purple flowers do not become the color of my hair," laments Betty, "and I have no jeweled dagger."

Another noble lady, softly says Lady Fawcett, jumped into the English channel. "But she was discovered three days later, and oh dear, they say her appearance was dreadful—dreadful. It was so unfortunate—but then she did not expect to appear before people again!" Lady Fawcett has suddenly an inspiration—she remembers another lady who, pressed by creditors, went to Newgate prison and married a man who was banged the following morning. Now at this period, according to law, a husband, on marrying a woman, assumed her debts. By marrying a man to be banged a noble lady could expeditiously get rid of her debts—and her husband as well.

In Newgate prison, Suggs, the burly jailer, capitially enticed by Percy D. Standing, proposes to Jack Rumpole, who is condemned to be banged the following morning, that he thus help a lady out of a dilemma by marrying her. For this little service he will receive such compensation as will enable Suggs to enjoy a tip and buy a coffin in which to bury Jack. Lady Betty and her friend, having eluded the bailiffs, have arrived at the prison, and beholding ladies, though masked, so fair, the gallant prisoner consents to the ceremony.

Newgate jail is about to be burned by incendiaries. Sir Richeot, informed of the plot by Terran-Tyke, solicitor for the condemned Jack, arrives at the jail just after Lady Betty has been married. Learning of the marriage, imperturbed by the solicitor, Sir Richeot revenges his rejection by pardoning Lady Betty's unknown husband.

Five months later Lady Betty, relieved of her debts by her Aunt Mab, believing that her jail-husband was hanged, falls in love with Lord John Derring. Lord Derring, madly in love with Lady Betty, is withheld from marriage for awhile by a terrible memory—that of marrying an unknown woman who, under another name, he was condemned to death in Newgate. Already married and not realising it, Lady Betty and Lord Derring are plunged into a complex situation full of alternating high humor and whimsical distress. Knowing more than the two unhappy lovers, the audience, of course, sees the sun shining behind the clouds and is not surprised by the wild panic of Lord Derring and Lady Betty when they are led to believe they have married otherwise than they did. The conclusion of the play, when the truth is brought to light and the wedded lovers fall into one another's arms, is handled with adroit technical skill. The last act ends with an epilogue, in which each actor speaks a "piece" and draws a little moral. While this may prove "above the heads" of many, it will delight all who revel in Mr. Long's inimitable charm of style.

THEATRICAL BAEDEKER

ADELPHI—"The Truth," revival of Clyde Fitch's comedy. Grace George most delightful than ever in excellent presentation of a brilliant play. BROAD—"Lady Betty Martingale," new comedy by John Luther Long and Frank Statton, starring Mrs. Fiske. Review below. CHESTNUT STREET OPERA HOUSE—"Pilate's Daughter," by Francis I. Kennel. Miracle play spectacularly staged. FORREST—"Chin-Chin," musical fantasy, with music by Ivan Carlil. Fred Stone as a Chinese mandarin, Paderewski and a lady bareback rider. Delightful music; an engaging chorus of glorious girls. GARRICK—"The Yellow Ticket," melodrama by Michael Morton, starring Florence Reed. Tonight. KEITH'S—Lew Dockstader as "Teddy" in black—a screamingly funny burlesque. And a bill of varied excellence. LYRIC—"Passing Show of 1914," revue from the New York Winter Garden. Money saved on clothes elaborately expended on scenery. WALNUT—"The Round Up." Excellent presentation of popular drama on Wild Westera life, with "ship" car, corrupt and jovial as the "unloved" fat man.

Mrs. Fiske in this delicate, delightful play is an enchanting and engaging as ever—as much so as when she appeared as Becky Sharp. Eric Blind plays with true inspiration both as gallant prisoner and cavalier lover. The play is consummately staged, as, of course, is usual with Mr. Fiske.

FLASHES FROM "STARS"

Nan Campbell, who in three years has risen to the position of leading woman, has left the stage to become the bride of a lawyer widely known in New York, William Wilson Miller, senior member of the firm of Hornblower, Miller, Potter & Earle. Announcement was made last Saturday by Miss Campbell's mother, Mrs. William Arthur Campbell, of 266 West 55th street.

Mrs. Campbell and her daughter came to New York from Virginia about four years ago to enable her daughter to realize her ambition for a stage career. After a course in a dramatic school, Miss Campbell made her debut in "The Bridal Path." She subsequently played leading roles in "Marrying Money," "When Claudia Smiles" and in "Step Lively" on tour. Miss Campbell's last appearance was in Philadelphia as leading woman with "Drugged."

Frances Demarest, the prima donna of "The Passing Show of 1914," made her debut in Henry W. Savage's production of "Parsifal." She was one of the flower maidens. Previous to this engagement Miss Demarest, when 15 years of age, was soloist at Doctor Gonzales' church in Chicago, and at the same time was teacher of fencing at the Women's Athletic Club, in Chicago. While appearing as one of the flower girls in "Parsifal" Mr. Savage selected her for the prima donna role of the "Sultan of Sulu," in which she appeared for two seasons.

The cast of the new play written by Renold Wolf and Channing Pollock, in which Ross Stahl is to play the leading role, includes Harry Browne, William Norton, Raymond Van Sickle, Sidney Blair, Ned Sparks, Beatrice Noyes, Cherie Watson, Adele Adams, Isabel Goodwin, Marion Stephenson and others.
